

West Seattle students working on a special delivery

Students of Missa Marmalstein, left, at Pathfinder School in West Seattle display artwork they've made for a Port of Seattle contest. Port officials will select artwork from Pathfinder and West Seattle High School to decorate a refrigerated cargo container. It will be loaded onto an American President Lines ship this fall, and students will be able to follow the container's travel via weekly Internet reports. Port officials say the project is intended to inform young people about Seattle's key trade role.
